

Call for nominations for the Inaugural Rodolfo Saracci Lecture

The European Educational Programme in Epidemiology is intended for epidemiologists, public health practitioners, statisticians and clinicians with an interest in epidemiology. The course was established in 1988 by Rodolfo Saracci, Franco Merletti, Dimitrios Trichopoulos and Jorn Olsen. Rodolfo Saracci served as the Course Director for the first 25 years of the course, and subsequently, the course has been Directed by Professor Matthias Egger, Professor Manolis Kogevinas, and currently by Professors Lorenzo Richiardi and Neil Pearce.

To celebrate the 30th year of the course in 2017, we are instituting the Inaugural Rodolfo Saracci lecture. As well as his key role in the EEPE, Rodolfo Saracci has played a leading role in epidemiology internationally for many decades, including major contributions to the research work of the International Agency of Research on Cancer, and the International Epidemiological Association (for which he was President during 1996-1999).

The lecture will be delivered on the final day of the course (for 2017, this will be Friday 7th July). EEPE will cover travel expenses. The Saracci lecturer will also participate in the final course dinner and celebration on the Thursday evening (6th July 2017).

The lecture can cover any topic in epidemiology, but in general we will give preference to 'big picture' overview talks. These could be on a particular area of substantive research, on epidemiological methods, or on epidemiology and its links with public health. In general, the Saracci lecture will be delivered by someone who is a former student of the EEPE.

We welcome nominations for the Inaugural Saracci Lecture in 2017. Applicants could be self-nominated or nominated by a current or former member of the EEPE faculty, and the nomination should involve: (i) a covering letter outlining the reasons for the nomination (including the year that the applicant attended the EEPE, if relevant); (ii) brief cv (two pages plus one page of selected publications); and (iii) a one-page maximum abstract of the proposed talk.

Please send nominations to: eepe@eepe.org
